PROMOTE TECHNICAL TRAINING TO INCREASE PRODUCTION

By Liao Ssu-kuang

~~by Liu Chi-kuang~~

Increased production is a basic interest of the working class and of the people as a whole. It is an essential factor for the fundamental improvement of the nation's financial and economic condition. From either the present or the future point of view, it is necessary to mobilize the people to exert the greatest efforts to restore and develop production throughout the nation. Only in this way can we strengthen the gains from the revolutionary victory, make our country stronger and improve the living standard of the working class and of the people in general.

The promotion of technical training is indispensable to the production drive, for within a given period of time there is a physical limitation upon human labor. Technical improvement is the most efficient and permanent solution of the production problem. Therefore, we can increase production only when we improve our technique. The people of the Soviet Union are very enthusiastic workers, and they are extremely interested in improving their work technique. The result is that they have developed highly advanced technical skills. We too must improve our production technique if we are to increase the wealth of the nation and improve the lot of the people.

Youth is full of ambition and courage. This character has enabled the young workers to achieve unusual progress on the production front. Since the liberation, workers in the Canton area have made very good contributions towards factory protection, confiscation of factor^{els}, the movement to support the front, the movement to conserve materials and improve production techniques, et cetera. At present, the Communist Party and the People's Government are conducting a great campaign to inspire the people to love their country and countrymen, to love work and science, and to love public property. During this movement, distinguished workers have been chosen as labor heroes. These measures show that whoever improves his skill and increases production will receive high respect and material reward. Indeed, the most important task for the young workers is to improve their technical skill, enabling them to exercise greater influence in the field of production. The present people's democracy and the socialism and communism of the future all depend on the young generation. Henceforth, we must study industrial technique.

The young generation is the hope of the people. The young workers should therefore train themselves to be the pillars of production. Let us study production techniques with greater zeal in order to increase production and to improve the nation's basic financial and economic conditions.
